

Part VI : Miscellany

PROLOGUE

Participation by the experts on different disciplines viz. children, environment and human health formed the proceedings of the Conference and their good knowledge, experience and at times philosophies immensely benefitted the delegates from India and various developed and developing countries. The programme of the Conference was designed to cover possibly as much problem areas as possible and derive maximum results through cross communication of minds for the good of the society and nature both. The important dignitaries presided each day in plenary and concurrent sessions and each session made the quality of Conference high and lively in true sense and provided messages of enduring human behaviour as how to develop, nurture and value human relationship to preserve the sanctity of people and nature both.

This part includes the vital recommendations of the International Conference on children, environment and human health. Some of the recommendations on children include an Alliance for the Child, review of all national legislations on child, introduction of the CRC (Convention on the Rights of the Child) into the Syllabi of graduate law courses and to actively lobby and build alliances with decision makers. However, on environment at national and international levels recommendations promote the concept of sustainable development and implementation of environmental laws. On human health all the relevant laws need to be strictly enforced without any discrimination. These are some of the highlights of the outcome of International Conference ever held in so many disciplines in India. This segment truly depicts the rich outcome of the International Conference for the benefit of the humanity at large.
