

FOREWORD

The Karnataka State Unit of the Indian Law Institute has done well in bringing out this book on the Law relating to Services under the State.

In any system of Government, a conscientious, efficient and contented service is the backbone of Administration. Though the Statutory provisions governing the civil servants are not many, the complexities of the problems which have arisen over the years and particularly after the Re-organisation of States, are so many that solutions to them have had to be found largely through judicial pronouncements. The High Court of Karnataka has made a significant contribution to this branch of the Law.

The Book is not a mere Digest of Cases. It has the merit of stating the Principle and illustrating it with judicial precedents. Much labour and thought have been bestowed on its preparation. I have no doubt that it will be of great assistance to Lawyers and Judges and to the Administration.
