The following judgments were delivered :—

KEMP, J.—The plaintiff in this case is a mukhtar of the Mozufferpore Zilla. His allegation is that the defendants, having occasion to bring a suit to set aside certain alienations made by their father, and being straightened for means, applied to him, the plaintiff, and entered into an arrangement with him that he, the plaintiff, should carry on the suit on their behalf, furnishing all the expenses of the suit, and that in the event of success he, the plaintiff, was to receive a moiety of certain properties. This was the first arrangement made. This arrangement, it is said, was reduced to writing, and it is alleged that a rough copy of the arrangement, and a piece of blank stamp paper bearing the signatures of the two defendants, were made over to a third party, Goodur Sahoy, on the understanding that if the High Court pronounced in favor of the defendants' claim in the suit to set aside the alienations made by their father, the deed was to be copied out fair on the blank stamp paper and made over to the plaintiff. I will mention here that the alleged original agreement was admittedly, as far as the plaintiff's allegation is concerned, departed from; and subsequently, it is alleged by the plaintiff, the parties agreed that the sum of Rs. 2,000, which plaintiff alleged he had expended for the purposes of the suit brought by the defendants, was to represent the consideration-money for which the defendants were to give to the plaintiff an istim-ravi mukarrari lease of a share in certain properties, one amongst these properties being the mauza in which their own family residence is situated. It appears that on a former occasion the plaintiff in bringing his suit was met by a plea of under-valuation by the defendants. The plaintiff then prudently withdrew his suit, and has now brought it valuing it at Rs. 800, being one year's profits of the disputed property. Now in a case of this description where the plaintiff, who is a mukhtar of a Court, claims to be entitled to carry into specific performance an agreement alleged to have been entered into by him and the defendants, which agreement savours of champerty, it is necessary that such a claim should be certain, fair, and just in all its parts. In the case before us we have a mukhtar who asks the Court to believe that he advanced

Rs. 2,000 in carrying on a litigation on behalf of the defendants which was successful in special appeal, the costs of the special appeal being only Rs. 12 and some annas. Of this sum of Rs. 2,000 said to have been expended, we have no account whatever. The plaintiff was examined, and out of Rs. 2,000 he can account for only Rs. 110, namely, the initiatory stamp of Rs. 50 and vakeel's fees amounting to Rs. 60 or 65. We have also what is clear from his own admission that the mukhtar entered into a transaction in which a blank stamp paper was alleged to have been signed by the defendants, which was subsequently followed up by a deed purporting to be an istimrari mukarrari lease of properties yielding, according to the plaintiff's own admission, profits to the amount of Rs. 300 per annum; so that even if we could believe the plaintiff's story that he had spent Rs. 2,000 in litigating the defendant's suit, he has obtained from them property which at ten years' purchase,—and that is about the lowest valuation to be put upon property of this description—is worth Rs. 8,000, as a return for his money and labor.

We have carefully considered the evidence in this case which has read to us in detail; indeed we have given the plaintiff the benefit of having his special appeal turned into a regular appeal in order that the whole of the evidence pro and con might be carefully considered by the Court;—and the result is that there is in my opinion no evidence that the rough draft which the witness Sham Narain Singh, the vakeel on part of the plaintiff, says he drew out, was drawn up in the presence of the defendants or with their consent. It may be, and we think it appears from the whole of the evidence,—nor indeed is it seriously denied by the pleader for the defendants,—that the plaintiff, being a speculative mukhtar, may have advanced small sums, and may have given some portions of his time in looking after and conducting this litigation. If he has any claim on that score, he ought to have brought this suit for moneys advanced and for remuneration for his labor devoted to the case. His suit in the present shape is not a fair and just demand, but a hard and unconscionable bargain which no Court of equity will tolerate for a moment. Both the Courts below have considered this case to be one in which the plaintiff cannot sustain. The Judge was of opinion that the case savoured of champerty, and he refers to a judgment of the learned Chief Justice Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Brojo Kishoree Dasse v. Sreenath Bose (1), in which that learned Judge held that although “he did not mean to say that the law of champerty is a law applicable to the mofussil, still he thought that the Courts would be exercising a very unsound discretion and would be acting upon a very erroneous principle if they would allow a stranger to interfere in family affairs,

PUCHANJA

The judgment of their LORDSHIPS was delivered by

Sir JAMES COLVILLE.—In this case the appellant sued the respondent, who was the zemindar of Marungapury, to recover on an agreement between him and the real heirs that, if he could establish their claim, he would be entitled to a share of the estate." The present case being one in which a Mahomedan speculative mukhtar has chosen to interfere in the family affairs of a Hindu family, in which he has thought proper to advance, as he says, the money to carry on the suit to set aside the alienations made by the defendants' father, on the understanding that he was to be entitled to a share of the estate so recovered from the purchasers in the event of the success of the heirs, we think that we should be exercising a very unsound discretion and acting upon very erroneous principles were we to countenance a suit of this description.

The suit of the plaintiff and this appeal are dismissed with costs of all the Courts bearing interest at 6 per cent.

E. JACKSON, J.—I wish only to say that I quite concur in the decision passed by my learned colleague and in the reasons given by him. When the case was before this Court in special appeal, it seemed to me that the decision of the lower Appellate Court had been passed against the evidence in the case, and it was on that account, and because the evidence consisted of the depositions of a large number of witnesses and was in some confusion, that the hearing of the regular appeal was transferred to this Court. The case has now been fully heard, and the whole of the evidence gone into. I am now satisfied upon that evidence that the plaintiff ought not to get a decree and that it is the case, as the defendants stated in their written statement, that they never entered into this contract at all. There was undoubtedly some talk of giving the plaintiff a maurusi lease of some of the lands in suit; but even upon the evidence it is not shown that anything was settled as regards the mukarrari rent, and of course in giving a mukarrari one of the most important things to be settled is the amount of rent to which the mukarraridar shall be liable. The mukarrari potta seem to have been drawn up actually by the plaintiff himself, and he, I suppose, must have put in the amount of rent which he wanted to pay, and afterwards the draft was fair copied on the blank stamp, which purports to have been signed by the defendants, without the consent of the defendants, in the absence of the defendants, and without any instructions from them, and it appears even to have been signed by the witnesses in the absence of the defendants. The manner in which all these proceedings have been carried on raises grave suspicions against the transaction: and the result of that transaction would appear to be, that for a very inconsiderable and trifling sum a valuable and large property would, in the course of the litigation regarding it, pass from the

the amount alleged to be due upon a bond, the material portion of which was as follows:—(His Lordship read the portion of the bond set out, ante, p. 513, and continued:)—The respondent was the younger brother of the late zemindar or polligar of Marungapury. He seems to have been treated as heir presumptive by his brother. Immediately upon his brother's death he was recognized by the authorities as the zemindar; and, being a minor, he and his estate were placed under the guardianship of the Court of Wards. It is stated in the judgments,—and, if the record in the former suit which has been recently before the Court is looked at, it amply appears,—that the widows themselves also recognized in the first instance this boy as the heir. And even without going out of the record, it appears upon what is strictly in evidence in this case, that for two years they acquiesced in his recognition by the Government as heir, and received at the hands of the Collector, who was exercising the power of the Court of Wards, certain sums by way of maintenance. In December 1866 a change came over them. The plaintiff in this suit then came upon the stage, and the agreement which is marked B was executed on the 21st day of that month. It is an agreement of a very singular nature, and the material portions of it are these:—(His Lordship, after reading the portions set out, ante, p. 510, continued:)—It appears then that these ladies having changed their mind, and determined to claim the estate as the heirs of the late zemindar, for that purpose put themselves wholly into the power and into the hands of the plaintiff; that they agreed to pay him on demand the moneys to be advanced with interest at the rates to be provided for in the bonds which the agreement contemplated they would give the plaintiff for the advances when made; that they further agreed that if they succeeded in the suit they would pay him a lakh of rupees and a moiety of the surplus col-defendants into the hands of their law agent who was conducting that litigation. There is nothing to show that the expense of that litigation amounted to anything like the sum stated by the plaintiff, or that it would be a just remuneration for his services.

I am not satisfied that the defendants ever entered into the contract set up, and I would also dismiss this appeal with costs.

lections, mortgaging the zemindari to secure those payments ; that they would do nothing in the suit or otherwise without his consent ; and that if they violated the agreement, they should at once become liable to pay both the principal and interest due on the loan bonds, and also the lakh of rupees and the amount of the surplus collections remaining with the Court of Wards on that day.

Under this stringent agreement the suit No. 30 of 1868 was instituted in their names ; but it is impossible to read the agreement and to know anything of the manner in which litigation is conducted in India without seeing that, although the suit was carried on in the name of the ladies, the whole management of it was committed to the plaintiff, and that he was, as was represented in the argument, the real dominus litis. It further appears that but one bond was executed by the widows under this agreement, viz., the bond which is dated the 26th of May 1867, and purports to be a bond for securing the repayment of the sum of Rs. 20,000 (the amount of the plaintiff's advances up to that time), with interest at 12 per centum per annum. The principal, if not the only, question raised in the suit by the widows was the legitimacy of their husband's younger brother. The family being a joint Hindu family, he, if legitimate, was unquestionably entitled to the zemindari as the heir preferable to the widows. A further question was, however, raised by the Collector who defended the suit as guardian of the minor zemindar, viz., whether the polliam was an hereditary estate at all, or one the succession to which, upon the death of the actual polligar was determinable by Government. The suit being in that state, the boy, having attained the age of eighteen, which is the age fixed by the Regulations for the majority of a zemindar(1), was put by the Court of Wards into possession of his estate, and made a formal defendant ; and immediately upon, or very shortly after that, the transactions which are in question in this suit took place. We find the dates given in the judgment of the Judge, Mr. Davidson, and there is no doubt about them. The defendant was installed as zemindar on the 23rd of July ; on the 2nd of August 1869 he had notice that he had been made supplemental defendant to the suit. The suit was fixed for hearing on the 16th; and on the 11th, in anticipation of that hearing, certain commissioners were sent to Marungapury by the Court, in order to examine the widows, who, of course, were parda women. The widows seem then to have become desirous of settling and compromising their suit, and the terms upon which they were willing to compromise were finally embodied in a razinama. Those terms, however, did not include any subsidiary arrangement to be made in respect of the money which was due from them to the plaintiff; the razinama only expressed that they were willing to consent to the dismissal of their suit upon the terms of their having assigned to them certain villages by way of maintenance, and each party paying his own costs.

(1) See Madras Regulation V of 1804. s. 4.

NAIKER,

As to what took place on the 11th and the subsequent days there is a considerable conflict of testimony; but their Lordships adverting to what was said by Mr. Davidson, the Judge, as to the credit due to the witnesses on either side, and particularly as to the manner in which the zemindar gave his evidence, and to the fact that the finding of the learned Judge has been adopted by the superior Court, have no doubt that it is their duty, upon any matter of fact upon which the testimony is conflicting, to adopt the finding of the Zilla Judge. It must, therefore, be taken as found, that on the 12th, when the first negotiation for the compromise took place, there were present on that occasion not only the vakeels and agents of the nominal parties to the suit, but certain persons acting on behalf of, or as agents for, the appellant; that the latter then contended that the compromise could not be carried into effect without their principal's consent; that a large sum of money was due from the ladies to him; that something was to be paid to him in respect of his interest under the agreement, and that it lay upon the zemindar to make those payments. It must further be taken to be found that, although Lekamani, the principal widow, stated that the sum due to the plaintiff was small, his agent made use of threats to the respondent to the effect that, unless he would make himself liable for money to the amount of Rs. 62,000, the consent of the plaintiff to the compromise would be refused ; that the case would go on, and would probably terminate in the loss of his zemindari. Their Lordships cannot doubt that such threats were used ; that the note for Rs. 62,000 was given by the respondent in consequence of them, and that that note was not given, as it has been once or twice represented in the argument, to Lekamani or anybody on Lekamani's behalf, but, was given to Runga Iyengar, who was one of the persons acting on behalf of the plaintiff.

The note having been thus given and obtained on the 12th, the razinama was signed by Lekamani and the respondent on the 13th. In the meantime a messenger had been sent from Marungapury to bring the plaintiff from Shivagunga, where he seems to have resided. It is stated that he was sent for on the 11th, but that he did not arrive until the evening of the 14th. On the 15th there was a further transaction. He asserted that Rs. 62,000 was not a sufficient satisfaction of his claims, and that he must have Rs. 67,000. As to what then took place, there is again a considerable conflict of evidence. It is sworn by him and by his witnesses that some examination of his accounts was made ; that by the account so rendered, it appeared that he had actually advanced to the ladies Rs. 58,000; although a bond had been taken for only Rs. 20,000 ; that he estimated the compensation to be allowed for the further benefit which, if the suit had been successful, he might have derived under the agreement B, at the sum of Rs. 13,000 odd ; that the Rs. 67,000 were compounded of those two sums, and that the respondent voluntarily executed the bond A for that amount. On the other hand, the case made for the respondent (which is deposed to both by him and his witnesses) is that there was no rendering of accounts at all ; that there was merely a demand for Rs. 67,000 instead of the Rs. 62,000 ; and that the plaintiff himself then renewed the threats which had been previously made by his agents.

Some but not all of the witnesses say that he threatened, if his demand was not acceded to, not only to go on with the pending suit, but also to sue on the note of hand for Rs. 62,000. All, however, speak to threats to the effect that he would go on with the suit, that he would carry it through all the Courts up to this board, and that the result to the young zemindar would probably be the loss of his zemindari and the ruin which had fallen upon other zemindars; they also swear that the respondent in vain asked for time to consult the Collector who had so recently been his guardian, and that, under the pressure so put upon him, he was induced to execute the bond for Rs. 67,000.

Their Lordships have already said that when the evidence is conflicting, they must adopt the view which was taken of it by the Judge, Mr. Davidson. They must, therefore, hold not only that the respondent acted under the pressure of the threats deposed to, but, upon the material question whether any accounts were rendered, that there was no accounting at all,—that the sum for which the bond was given was an arbitrary sum fixed by the plaintiff as the amount for which he would be content to allow the arrangement between the widows and the zemindar to be carried out. It may be observed that the bond as drawn out, is not altogether consistent with the story told by the plaintiff himself, since on the face of it the Rs. 67,000 would appear to be the balance found to be due in respect of advances, for maintenance, and for costs; whereas upon the statement and admission of the plaintiff himself, it included the sum of Rs. 13,000 and odd as a compensation for that contingent advantage which he was to derive under the agreement B, in the event of the success of the suit.

It may be well to state what afterwards took place before considering the legal effect of these transactions. On the 16th of August the suit came on for hearing; the razinama was then presented, but Mr. Norton, who had been counsel for the Collector, as guardian of the infant, and who appeared on that day as counsel for the zemindar, now adult, before the razinama was filed and acted upon, prayed for an adjournment. That was granted, and on the 31st of August the case came on for final hearing. Mr. Norton then, as Advocate-General, acting for the Collector alone and not for the zemindar, raised the question which was lately before their Lordships and was then finally decided, viz., that the estate was not hereditary; that the nomination of the infant zemindar as the next zemindar was an act of State with which the Municipal Court had nothing to do ; and upon that plea, which must now be taken to be unsustainable, the Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim, directing her to pay all the costs. Lekamani then appealed against that decision. No doubt, she might have acquiesced in the title of the zemindar, and they might have privately carried out the arrangements, supposing they were to be carried out, upon which they had previously agreed. However, she saw fit to appeal ; but by her appeal she sought only that the decree, instead of being the decree that was made, should be a decree framed in consonance with the razinama. In this she did not go beyond her rights. The respondent appeared upon the appeal by his counsel, and treated the razinama as a thing altogether gone, and by which he was no longer bound. The High Court seems to have considered that that was so, and that the razinama was to be out of the case. They dealt with the ground upon which the suit had been dismissed, and finally decided, in a very elaborate judgment which has since been confirmed by Her Majesty in Council, that there was nothing in that ground ; that the estate must be taken to be an hereditary estate, and that the succession to it was to be determined by the Civil Courts according to the ordinary law of inheritance. They then gave the widow time to consider whether she would press her suit, and have the case remanded in order that the issue as to the legitimacy of the respondent might be regularly tried. The widow elected to have that issue tried. The case was remanded, and the respondent was found to be legitimate. The widow afterwards appealed against that decision to Her Majesty in Council, and her appeal upon that point was dismissed. Therefore, the question of the legitimacy was fought out between the parties to the bitter end.

Now, upon the transactions which took place between the 11th and 16th August, several questions have been raised. The issues settled in this suit were in effect whether there was any consideration for the bond; and whether the bond had been obtained by such undue pressure and threats as were sufficient to vitiate the contract. And the principal questions which have been argued at the bar are, first, whether there was sufficient consideration for the bond ; next, whether, if there were, there had not been a failure of that consideration ; and thirdly, whether the plea impeaching the bond on the ground of pressure and threats could be supported.

Upon the first point their Lordships will assume, at all events for the sake of argument, that if the transaction had been between parties dealing with each other at arms' length, and unaffected by any of the circumstances on which the third plea is founded, there would have been a sufficient legal consideration to support the bond.

Assuming, however, that there was a real substantial debt due to the appellant from the women on an agreement to which no objection could have been taken ; that there was a bonâ fide arrangement by which the widows were to have their suit dismissed ; and that one term of that arrangement was that they should be relieved of the debt due to the plaintiff,—their Lordships must observe that they agree with the Judges of the High Court in holding that the transaction would hardly amount to what is called a “novation.” It was not a transaction by which the widows were altogether released from the debt which they had incurred to the plaintiff, nor was the plaintiff's position altered by reason of his having lost his remedy against them. It appears upon the face of the bond that he was to retain his securities against them until the bond was satisfied ; and that the contract on his part was, in fact, rather an agreement to abandon his remedy against them on the payment of the Rs. 67,000 than an actual abandonment at the time of the transaction.

The question which has been raised as to the failure of consideration, if it were necessary to determine it, might present some difficulty. It is quite clear that the respondent never got the benefit of that for which he stipulated ; that circumstances prevented the razinama from being acted upon ; and that in the events which afterwards took place he was exposed to have his title questioned and carried up to the Court of ultimate appeal, just in the same way as it would have been litigated had the razinama never been executed. On the other hand, there is, no doubt, a good deal of truth in the argument of Mr. Mayne to the effect that the failure of consideration was in some degree due to the respondent himself ; and that if, when the widow had appealed from the first decision in her suit and claimed the benefit of the razinama, he had joined in also asking for the benefit of the razinama, the whole transaction might have been carried out as the parties had originally intended it should be. It is, however, unnecessary to decide this question, since it appears to their Lordships that the respondent is entitled to succeed on the other issue settled in this suit.

What was really the position of the parties ? Here was a man who had originally nothing at all to do with this family. All the members of the family appear at first to have been agreed that this young boy was the true heir to the zemindari. The widows afterwards, then, either of their own mere motion, or at the instigation of the plaintiff or his agents, determined to dispute that title. They next deprived themselves of all freedom of action with respect to the suit which they thought fit to bring, by giving the interest and the powers which are given by the agreement B to the plaintiff.

With respect to the law of champerty or maintenance, it must be admitted, and indeed it is admitted in many decided cases, that the law in India is not the same as 'it is in England. The Statute of Champerty, being part of the Statute Law of England has of course no effect in the mofussil of India ; and the Courts of India do admit of the validity of many transactions of that nature, which would not be recognized or treated as valid by the Courts in England. On the other hand, the cases cited show that the Indian Courts will not sanction every description of maintenance. Probably, the true principle is that stated by Sir Barnes Peacock in the course of the argument, viz., that administering, as they are bound to administer, justice according to the broad principles of equity and good conscience, those Courts will consider whether the transaction is merely the acquisition of an interest in the subject of litigation bonâ fide entered into, or whether it is an unfair or illegitimate transaction got up for the purpose merely of spoil, or of litigation, disturbing the peace of families, and carried on from a corrupt or other improper motive. Now, looking at all the facts of this case, their Lordships think it is extremely doubtful whether the plaintiff could have recovered on this agreement if the question had arisen between the widows and the plaintiff after he had got the estate for them; whether, upon the principle laid down by Peacock, C.J., in Brojo Kishoree Dasse v. Sreenath Bose (1), cited by Kemp, J., in the case of Sheikh Abed Hossein v. Lalla Ramasaran (2), the Courts might not have refused to enforce such an agreement. The principle laid down by the learned Judge was that although the law of champerty was not a law applicable to the mofussil the Courts would be exercising a very unsound discretion, and acting on a very erroneous principle, if they were to allow a stranger to interfere in family affairs, by an agreement between him and the real heirs that if he should establish their claim he should be entitled to a share of the estate. Nor, in holding that such an agreement could not be enforced would the Courts, as it seems to their Lordships be running counter to what was decided by this Committee in the case of Fischer v. Kamala Naiker (3); for the judgment there assumes that if the agreement is something against good policy and justice, something tending to promote unnecessary litigation, something that in the legal sense is immoral, it cannot be supported. But it is not necessary for their Lordships to decide a question which has not arisen, viz., what would have been the rights of the appellant as against the widows. It is sufficient for them to say that they are dealing with a person who had got up, or at all events intervened in, a suit with which he had no necessary concern; who had made himself dominus litis in that suit, and had acquired over the plaintiffs in it the power of preventing them from doing what they felt to be right and just; and from interested and corrupt motives was exercising that power. The zemindar must be taken to have been the legitimate heir; and even if the widows had bonà fide entered into the litigation to dispute that legitimacy, it is perfectly clear that at the time when this transaction took place, they had come to a better mind, and had satisfied themselves that the right thing as regarded the boy and as regarded the family was to acquiesce in his title, to admit his legitimacy, and to allow him to remain zemindar.

Their Lordships think it would be contrary to every sound principle of justice and of policy to permit a person who had acquired this sort of irregular interest in a suit, and a power which cannot be safely conceded to any speculator, to make his power of preventing a family arrangement so just and proper from being carried into effect the means of extorting a large sum of money from the person whose title had been unjustly challenged. The case, however, does not rest here. The transaction was not one entered into between two persons, each of whom was capable of taking care of himself. Here was a boy of eighteen without proper counsel or assistance; for such of his servants as gave him any advice thought with him that he should do nothing until he could see the Collector; and his vakeel, who was represented as his legal adviser in the matter, disowns having given him any counsel, and has been treated as having failed in his duty in refusing that Counsel. There is, moreover, clear evidence that he was threatened with the consequences of not immediately acquiescing in the plaintiff's demand; that these threats were addressed by a powerful man to a boy and were therefore likely to disturb his mind and render him incapable of acting as a free agent. Whoever has had to do with litigation in India must know that such threats are of far greater weight there than they would be in this country. This suit was one in which the legitimacy of the respondent was called in question; and the person threatening was a person conversant with law suits—a person of great wealth and great power; and we all know how easy it is in India upon such an issue as that, to get up any amount of false evidence, and that it is not because a man has a true case that he is sure to bring it to a successful issue. Their Lordships think the Judges of the High Court have rather understated the case when they treated the threats as threats only of consequences perfectly legal; for (putting aside the threat as to suing on the note for Rs. 62,000, which is not so satisfactorily proved as the others,) they think that the threats proved may well be taken to be threats of carrying on the litigation against the respondent per fas aut nefas. In any case they were threats which overcame his free-will, and induced him, contrary to his own judgment and his own sense of right, and without any evidence that any such sum as was claimed was due, to execute the bond extorted from him.

That being their Lordships' view, they think that the Court below was right in holding that the bond cannot stand against the respondent. It is not necessary to go into the question, which has been argued on both sides, as to the power of the Court to make the bond stand as a security for what may really have been advanced. It is not necessary to consider whether in a suit brought to enforce a fraudulent deed against a person from whom something is justly due, a Court of Justice ought to exercise the power of saying that such a deed shall stand as security for what is really due; because in this case, but for the bond which was thus extorted from him, nothing was ever due from the respondent to the appellant, and there existed no privity of contract between them.

Upon these grounds their Lordships think that the decisions of the Courts below, now under appeal, were right, and they must humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm them, and to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.
