

FOREWORD

I have great pleasure in placing before the law schools, the bar and the judiciary this volume on Cases and Materials on Labour Law and Labour Relations in India. This is the second in the series of case books planned by the Indian Law Institute. The case book attempts to present the nature and growth of labour law in the context of changing Indian society. Reliance has, therefore, been placed on non-technical and extra-legal material. I take this opportunity of thanking Professor Bertram Willcox and his group for their untiring efforts.
